

HOW TO MAKE AN ETHICS PROGRAM WORK

Mark Davies
New York City Conflicts of Interest Board

Educate public officials, the public, and the press about what the ethics law and the ethics board are and are not

- That the purpose of ethics laws is to promote both the reality and the perception of integrity in government by preventing unethical conduct before it occurs
- That the focus of ethics laws is therefore upon prevention, not punishment
- That ethics laws assume that the vast majority of public servants are honest and want to do the right thing, and thus that these laws are not meant to catch corrupt officials
- That ethics laws do not regulate morality, or even ethics, but conflicts (usually financial conflicts) between a public servant's official duties and private interests (i.e., divided loyalty)
- That ethics laws should encourage good people to serve in government by providing guidance to officials and reassurance to citizens that their public servants are serving the public and not themselves

Facilitate the enactment of an effective government ethics law that promotes the above purpose and principles

- By resting upon the three pillars of
 - A clear, comprehensive, simple, and sensible code of ethics
 - Sensible transactional, applicant, and annual disclosure
 - Effective administration that provides quick and confidential advice, training and education, public disclosure, and reasonable enforcement
- By establishing an independent ethics board
 - With pro bono members, who have no other government position, engage in no political activities, have no government contracts, do not lobby the government, have fixed terms, and are removable only for cause
 - With budget protection

ORAL AND WRITTEN ADVICE

- Purpose: To prevent conflicts of interest by giving government officers and employees quick answers to their ethics questions.
- Cover: Advice, particularly written advice, provides “cover” for officials unjustly accused of violating the ethics code.
- Authority: The ethics commission is the only agency authorized to authoritatively interpret the ethics law.
- Confidentiality: The ethics commission's communications with government officials seeking advice must be protected against disclosure to the public or to other government agencies, at least to the extent that the government official asks for advice on future conduct. (Past conduct is a matter for enforcement, and officials should be told that.)
- Oral advice: Ethics commission attorneys should be available every day to answer questions by telephone. An official should be able to ask a question without revealing his or her name.
- Written advice: Written opinions should be given quickly. Simple questions should be answered by staff. Only complicated questions should go to the commission.
- Ethics officers: If possible, set up ethics officers in every agency, who will act as a liaison to the ethics commission. But officials must always be able to come directly to the ethics commission.
- Opinions: Written advisory opinions should be distributed to every agency so that officials may consult them. The opinions should not reveal who requested the opinion.
- Waivers: Ethics commissions should have limited power to waive certain provisions of the code of ethics where they do not make sense in the particular case.

How city workers can avoid big trouble

Adam Lisberg

Saturday, July 12th 2008, 10:16 PM

The city's ethics cops were hard at work last week naming seven city employees who have to pay fines and face public humiliation for violating taxpayer expectations that they serve without conflicts of interest.

Three of them were called out for breaking ethics rules on behalf of nonprofit groups.

A school principal was fined $2,250 for asking his teachers to donate to a Haitian relief group he runs; a Health Department worker was penalized $7,500 for running a nonprofit for teens that works with several city agencies, including her own; and an environmental department architect was charged $1,000 for using his city phone and computer to talk to the Parks Department about youth wrestling programs run by his nonprofit.

These kinds of cases are the bread and butter of the Conflicts of Interest Board, five mayoral appointees confirmed by the City Council who make sure New York's 300,000 employees don't abuse city time or resources.

Most of the board's dozens of cases each year seem like cut-and-dried probes of boneheaded moves by employees who ought to know better. The board also offers ethics classes and confidential advice to city workers so they don't get in a jam in the first place.

But the one way for a city employee to stay out of trouble while helping a nonprofit on city time may just be to request a waiver in advance - which is exactly what Mayor Bloomberg did for his top brass.

Last year, the mayor asked the Conflicts of Interest Board to let his health commissioner, Thomas Frieden, work gratis on health issues for the Bloomberg Family Foundation, at times with his city phone and computer.

The board agreed, finding "that this work would further the purposes and interests of the city."

When the Daily News noted in December that Deputy Mayor Patti Harris and her assistant Allison Jaffin were doing the same kind of work, Bloomberg promptly asked for - and received - the same clearance.

The Bloomberg Family Foundation isn't the only nonprofit serving a city interest. In 2006, the board cleared Bloomberg and other city officials to raise money for the World Trade Center Memorial Foundation, saying the group's activities "plainly support the purposes and interests of the city."

Bloomberg praised the board in May for being practical-minded in a speech at its annual ethics seminar.

"If we rule out every potential conflict, then we are going to keep the best and the brightest out of government and not get their services," Bloomberg said. "So it's finding that right balance. And I think the COIB, in all fairness, has so far found that balance."

Representatives for the three city workers who got slammed last week declined to comment. But the ethics lesson for city employees may be less about what to do - and more about how to do it.

Or as ethics watchdog Gene Russianoff of the New York Public Interest Research Group puts it: "It's really the difference between asking the conflicts board for permission, and getting caught."
